Objectives and Key Results Overview

2

Purpose of slides

- Give an overview to a "project manager" / "planning" / "management" level called objectives and key results.
- It's an industry thing made famous by Intel. A lot of companies use it as a way of driving action statements.
- I used to do this before, to use a very valuable way of organizing work, setting direction, vision and prioritization.

3

Purpose of OKRs

- Measure your work: You define OKRs every 3 months (or 6 or 9 months) based on company OKRs.
- Know together: Be sure right direction. If you are starting your objectives as a director, or team level, it's better for everyone to align.
- Prioritize: Should have 3-5 objectives. Everything else is noise, or not important to your success (Team, individual).
- Highlight: Should be a highlight process.
- Teams that don't have a bit of focus (the observation).

4

How does it work

Define an objective:

- What you want to achieve (Qualitative)
- Ideally to aspirational, engaging or motivating
- Memorable, short and simple
- People outside the team understand it.

5

How does it work

Measure your objective with key results:

- Good to see if you are progressing your objective.
- Quantitative, it should be measurable. (Metric over milestones)
- Ideally 2-3 key results per objective.
- Ideally your key results do not include dependencies.

But if you're dependent on someone else ultimately, make sure they have objectives that support you and it's understood. Good way to identify assignments.
